Alexandria Gazette.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 28, 1882.

IN HER GLORY AGAIN,-Mrs. Sprague and her daughters returned to their home at Edgewood some weeks since, and have been spending the spring weeks there quiet- streets. ly. In appearance that lady of undying fame and beauty has never been so striking Building.

R. Bell's Sous, 61 King street. as now. The same grace and loveliness that always distinguished her still remains, and with her pride and spirit unbroken she is as charming as ever. At one time grief and sorrow seemed to have left a visible impress on her, but from that she rallied, and is now a more queenly beauty than when she first ruled over Washington society, and all the town raved and ran after her. Those who saw have never forgotten the picture she made before their eyes, and the long time members of society here like to tell of the one particular spot in the East Room of the White House where Mrs. Sprague used to hold her court. Mrs. Langtry, under her favorite oak in Hyde Park, had not half such a court about her as Mrs. Sprague in the heyday of her fortune. Then she used often to stand near the big chandelier at the south end of the East Room, and this one world came to her and admired her. Her social successor has never appeared, and, though it has been said once in a while of some popular beauty that she had received the mantle of Mrs. Sprague, the assertion was merely an extravagant compliment that nothing afterward carried out.—Washington Correspondent of St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
